At $5.95 Instead of $8.50—Extra large size golden oak and mahogany finish Morris Chairs spring seats and reversible cushions covered with figured velvet, assorted colorings.

At $8.95 Instead of $11.50—Very heavy frame Morris Chairs in golden oak and mahogany finish, with spring seats and reversible cushions, covered with figured velvet.

Odd Parlor Suits and Pieces at Half.

We've really made some very remarkable prices here for Monday, but the prices after all are not the most attractive features of this furniture. It's the furniture itself, the way it is designed, the sincere manner in which it is made, the tastefulness of coverings, and the harmony of colorings. Some are offered at onethird less than regular prices, and some as low as one-half. For instance: Inlaid Frame Chair, covered with tapestry:

> $12.00 reduced to $6.00. $17.00 reduced to $8.50.

$14.00 reduced to $7.00. $19.00 reduced to $9.50.

$40.00 reduced to $27.00.

3-piece Inlaid Parlor Suit, covered with Tapestry: $64.00 reduced to $42.00.

$80.00 reduced to $54.00. 3-piece overstuffed Parlor Suit, covered with Damask:

$95.00 reduced to $58.00.

$138.00 reduced to $85.00.

3-piece Gold Frame Suit, covered with Damask: $180.00 reduced to $90.00.

Notable Sale of Rugs.

We've never had a more interesting display of Rugs -Rugs that have the very art, poetry and romance of the East about them, that peculiar charm which seems to lead one to dream and build castles in the air; bits of art that add cosiness and beauty to every house they reach. And the modern-made rugs vie well in design and coloring with the old works of art from the land of the rising sun. This sale to-morrow embraces

SIGNOR FOLI'S CAREER.

James Foley of Tipperary and Hartford Made a Great Name Abroad. Signor Foli, who died last week in London elped to keep alive one tradition which is rarely seard of now, although it furnished at one time inspiration to many humorists. His real name was Poley, but he gave it the Italian form when he took to the operatic stage and he bore it with honor through a long career.

Allan James Foley was his full name and he was born in Cahir, Tipperary, Ireland. He was brought to this country as a child by his father, who settled in Hartford, Conn., and earned his living as a day laborer. The boy showed evidences that he possessed a voice and this developed as he grew older, into a remarkably fine base He had learned the carpenter's trade and added to his small income by singing at the oldest place of Roman Catholic worship in Hartford, St. Patrick's Church. He afterward became a member of the choir at a Congregational Church in Hart-ford, and while there his voice attracted the attention of one of the wealthiest women in the congregation. Foley was a temperate, industrious young man and seemed likely to repay any effort at developing his talents. On the advice of the organist of the church, this wealthy woman contributed a large sum to the fund raised by the congregation to send Mr. Foley to Europe to cultivate his voice. He went to Italy, studied in Naples under Bisaccia and made his debut in Catania, Italy, in 1862, with a success that justified the generosity of the Amer-and made his debut in Catania, Italy, in 1802, with a success that justified the generosity of the Americans who made his musical education possible. He sang in the Italian cities with a success which brought him in a few years to the Theatre des Italiens in Paris. In 1885 he made his first appearance in London, where he was destined to spoud so much of his subsequent career. He sang there first Saini-Bris in "Les Hueguenots" and was heard during the same season in fi Flauto Magico" and "Der Freischutz." He immediately became a London favorite, and that always means a longer term of popularity than any other city in the world offers. He sang Daland there in 1870, when "Der Fleische Hollaender" was performed in London. He sang for many years in opera at Covent Garden and at the other theatres, and made a professional visit to this country under the management of Col. Mapleson. He same hoppularity he had in London. He was an admired singer in cratorio, and in other ways strengthened his hold on the Familish public. He created in England Jarob in Macfarren's "Joseph," sung at Leeds in 1977, and Herod in Berliox's "The Childhood of Jesus, produced at Manchester in 1880 and in London in the following year. He sang first in anatorio in "Israel" in 1865, but made no great impression, and it was not until a year later, when he appeared in "The Creation," that he was haled as an oratorio singer of equal ability with his operatic and concert talents.

He was a great favorite in Russia, and the demand for his services abroad was so great that he never returned here to sing after his first visit. He frequently returned, however, to his old home, and on these occasions invariably sang in the church in which he was first heard. He was here for the last time about two months ago. He was on his way to Oregon at the time. He owned there an extensive tract of ground, on which he was accustomed to hunt every year. He retained his voice in remarkably good condition.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4 .- Secretary Root announced to-day that his annual report will not be ready for several weeks. He has but recently bogun its preparation and will be un-able to complete it until Gen. Otte's annual re-port reaches the department. This has left Manils and is expected in Washington within the next two weeks.

PREPARING EARLY FOR 1900. Massachusetts Democrats not the Only

Second floor.

When the Democrate of Massachusetts at their State Convention at Mechanics' Hall in Boston on Sept. 21 elected delegates to the National Convention of 1900, which has not yet been called, it was thought by many persons that this precipitancy of Democratic partisans, especially in a strong Republican State like Massachusetts. was grotesquely ill advised, and there were many protests among the Democrats of that State against what they stigmatized as 'a practical denial of veritable Jeffersenian representation." The delegates were elected nevertheless, regardless of the fact that none of them yet knows or can know to what city he is accredited, when he is expected to be in attendance, and what will be the nature of the call upon Democrats toward his election. It is decidedly a case of putting the cars before the borse, for the choice of dele gates to represent a political party at a national convention in the United States presupposes an authoritative call for such a convention and this call usually contains a statement of the principles which the delegates are by their action to carry into effect. Usually, the Democratic National Committee meets in the city of Washing ton on Feb. 22 in the year of a Presidential election and settles the time and place of the meeting and the form of invitation to delegates. The date of this meeting is now nearly four months off, but this consideration was without effect upon the Democrats of Massachusetts.

More recently their party brethren in another State, strongly Democratic, have adopted a somewhat similar course, the Democratic State Committee of Alabama having called the State Committee of Alabama having called the State Nominating Convention for the election of next year. It was, it announced, to be held in Montgomery on April 25. There was something of a contest at the meeting of the State Committee between Gov. Johnston's friends and his antagonists, the latter being hostile to his senatorial aspirations to succeed the veteran John T. Morgan whose term expires on March 4, 1901, and who has been a representative of Alabama in the upper house in Washington since 1877. The casential part of the action of the Alabama State Convention, however, has been the fixing of the date April 25 for the holding of the convention, a date which may seem to many persons unduly early, as the State election for Governor and other offices in Alabama does not take place until the month of August. April nominations for an August contest involve a four months' campaign, and the necessity of si protracted a campaign, and the necessity of si protracted a campaign does not seem to be altogether apparent, as Alabama is now one of the States in which Democratic preponderance is security established, and the Republicans have not for a number of years made any serious effort to carry it. In the election of 1802 the bulk of the Republican party sustained, in Alabama, the Populist electoral ticket as the most effective way of opposing continued Democratic supremacy there, though many of the local Republicans refused to assent to this course, voting for a straightout Republican to the text and getting 9,200 votes in a total considerably in excess of 200,000. So far as may be now discerned a Democratic nomination for State office in Alabama is very nearly equivalent to an election. The Populist party has little organization there, the kohl faction of independent Democratis is no longer active, the white Republican visite is inconsiderable, and the colored organization there, the kolb faction of independent Democratis is no longer active, the white Republican vote is inconsiderable, and the colored Republican vote has in recent years been somewhat divided, especially during the administration of tiev. Johnston, who interposed his opposition to the plan of wholesale negro disfranchiament, and who in consequence received, when last a candidate, the support of many colored Alabama Republicans. National delegates are to be chosen, it is announced, in April for the Democratic convention.

Sixty-ninth to Bring Its Dead Here.

A commission appointed from the Sixtyninth Regiment by Col. Edward Duffy will start shortly for Huntsville and Fernandina to bringto New York the bodies of the regiment's unclaimed dead, seven in number, buried there. Unless ciaimed by relatives here the bodies will be interred at Calvary semetery in a plot given to the regiment by Archbishop Corrigan and the trustees of the cemetery. It is proposed to erect a granite shaft on the plot.
